Dr. B. J. Kendall Co.,

Dear Sira—Inow take the pleasure of testifying of your "Reusiall's Spavin Cure" and its merits. I can say to my surprise that it has cured for me two Ringsbones which came on this Spring on a three year old coit. I used it according to directions on the bottle. It is worth five times the cost of it to any man who has need of using any horse medicine of the kind. It any one doubts this to be a fact, please write direct to me. JOHN JONES.

RELICS OF DICKENS.

MANY QUAINT BUILDINGS MADE FA-MOUS BY THE NOVELIST.

Localities Peopled by the Genius of the Appeal to All, Are Fast Disappearing from Old London-Bleak House.

Ere long another of the fast vanishing localities, peopled by the genius of the master novelist with characters more real to us in some respects than their present inhabitants, will be nonexistent. Entering Lincoln's-inn-fields from Great Queen street, turn to the right, pause at 58, and picture Mr. Tulkinghorn emerging one evening from chambers where "lawyers lie like maggots in nuts." Imagine him walking through the inn, passing beneath its ancient Tudor gateway, and visiting Mr. Snagsby, the law stationer in Cook's court, Cursitor street, with a view of ascertaining where Nemo, the mysterious law writer, lives.

A little to the south of Old Buildings, on the west side of Chancery lane, are Bishop's court and Chichester Rents, the latter approached through a tunneled passage alongside the Three Tuns public house. To the Rents came the "two gentlemen, not very neat about the cuffs and buttons," who instituted be quisitious through the court, dived into the Sol's parlor and wrote with ravenous little pens on tissue paper "those sensational reports of the inquest which had just been held at that well fast or luncheon dish. Select crisp ment, the Old Sol's Arms."

Sol's is the present Old Ship Tavern. It stands at the head of the court, facing it on one side and the wall of Lincoln sweet cream, salt and enough flour to Inn on the other. It is certainly ancient make a moderately stiff batter. Drop mough, and on the first floor can still by the spoonful in hot lard, or fry in beaseen the identical long, low room olive oil, just enough to keep the skillet where the coroner presided, and where from burning,-New York Times. little Swills, the comic vocalist, presented to the harmonic meeting his admtrable impersonation of that important official.

So far identification is plain sailing. But where was the famous rag and bottle shop, whose gin soaked proprietor died from spontaneous combustion? Mr. Rimmer, in "About London with Dickens," is silent on the subject. The writer of "Dickens' London" thinks it must have stood in Bishop's court hard byfor no other reason apparently than the fact of its being "an old, narrow, dreary, decaying and mournful passage, just the place in which such people as the poor law writer and crazy Miss Flite would have made a home."

But a careful study of every allusion made by Dickens to the locality will, I think, show that Mr. Pemberton is probably mistaken. Krook's shop is spoken of as "lying and being in the skadow of the wall" — "blinded by the wall." No house in Bishop's court exactly answers to this description. On the contrary, the only likely one at the corner next to Old Sol's faces an open passageway which leads to New square. Krook's must therefore be sought for at Nos. 8 and 9 in the Rents (now occupied by a law stationer), opposite the Old Ship, fronting the court on one side and on the other "within a couple of yards off and entirely blinded by the wall" so often referred to in the narrative.

Miss Plite, meeting Esther Summerson and the wards in chancery one morning in Old square, invited them to come and see her lodgings. So close by did she live that, "slipping out at a little side gate," she "stopped most unexpectedly in a narrow back street" (Star yard, leading to Carey street), "part of some courts and lanes immediately outside the wall of the inn," and she was at home. She lodged in a garret at the top of Krook's shop, described as "blinded by the wall of Lincoln's Inn, which intercepted the light within a couple of yards." She lived in a pretty large room, from which she had a glimpse of the roof of Lincoln's Iun hall; the new one, be it remembered, for the old hall is entirely shut out from view by the tall houses in old buildings. It is during the visit that the poor little creature draws aside the curtain of the long, lew garret window and calls attention to a number of bird cages hanging there, whose occupants Lady Jane, the cat, is forever striving to deyour, crouching "on the parapet outside for hours and hours." This is conclusive testimony, for no other house in either court-save the Old Ship-possesses an attic with an outside parapet. The windows are mostly dormers, or flush with the wall, while from no other garret window—except Sol's—can a glimpse of the old hall roof he had. This can readily be tested by standing close to the hall and looking through the trees toward Chichester Rents, where the slated top story and long, low garret window of the rag and bottle shop may be identified.

In a miserable back room on the second floor of this dismal abode Captain Hawdon, alias Nemo, was found dead by Mr. Tulkinghorn and Krook-dying by his own hands from an overdose of opium. "To a hemmed in churchyard, pestiferous and obscene, they take our dear brother here departed and lower him down a foot or two." On the steps leading to this charmelhouse Dame Durden finds her mother, "with one arm creeping around a bar of the iron gate and seeming to embrace it." This spot is rather hard to find, but walk up Catherine street from the Strand, and half way up on the right turn into Russell court leading into Drury lane, and midway to the left of this passage, is the approach to the "consecrated ground."

The little tunnel of a court is much as it was forty years ago. But the lamp is gone, and the old from gate is not the one depicted by H. E. Browne. Children now play as best they can on the asphalted surface of the hemmed in area, where once poor Jo saw the mortal remains of the garanger who had been "werry good" to him put into the ground "werry nigh the top."—St. James Gazette.

It Often Depends.

A certain prelate had among his subordinates an Honest and simple minded clergyman, who was in the habit of pre-fixing to nearly all his replies the Latin word "distingno." One day the prelate, wishing to divert himself at the expense Master Hand, with Characters That of the said elergyman, in the midst of a large social gathering, gravely said to

> "Mr. Thaddens, would it be right, in a case of emergency, to baptize an infant with broth?"

> "Distinguo" (that depends), replied the ecclesiastic. "With broth from your kitchen, it would be very wrong indeed, but the broth served in the hospital under your management might very properly be used for the purpose, as if it s not pure water, it is not very far off." Storie Scelte.

Muscular Exercise and Health.

As many diseases, prominent among which are those of the abdominal and pelvic organs, are the consequences of congestion, and as good circulation does much for the prevention of such congestion, muscular exercise, by improving the general circulation both by increasing the activity of the heart and aiding in the venous return, will do much to prevent a large class of diseases.-Dr. J. M. Rice in Popular Science Monthly.
